

Lambros Baltiotis (Athens, 1966) is working as a senior investigator at the Office of the Greek Ombudsman and is a course director at Panteion University. He graduated from the Law School of Demokriton University. He obtained his diplôme of history from EHESS, Paris and his PhD from Panteion University. He has published several articles concerning citizenship issues, minorities in Greece and Albania, as well as, the linguistic and religious communities residing in the Balkans. His main scientific interests are citizenship in the Balkans and Eastern Europe, minorities and ethnicity issues in the nation state. His most recent articles include: “Citizenship as a means of inclusion or exclusion in post-Ottoman Balkans: The cases of Bulgaria, Greece and Turkey” (2012), ““Greeks” or “not Greeks”: The case of Greek-Orthodox from Hatay in Turkey” (2013), “Deprivations of citizenship on the grounds of “acting against the nation” during the Greek Civil War (2013). He also co-edited the collective volume “Nation beyond borders: Co-ethnic policies of the Greek state” (2013).